

Look Familiar?

IT SHOULD. It's basically the Contingencies contents page. It's also the home page of the newly redesigned Contingencies website. It's the work of our own Mary Connolly, the same wizard who last year took the Academy's problem-child website straight to the head of the class.

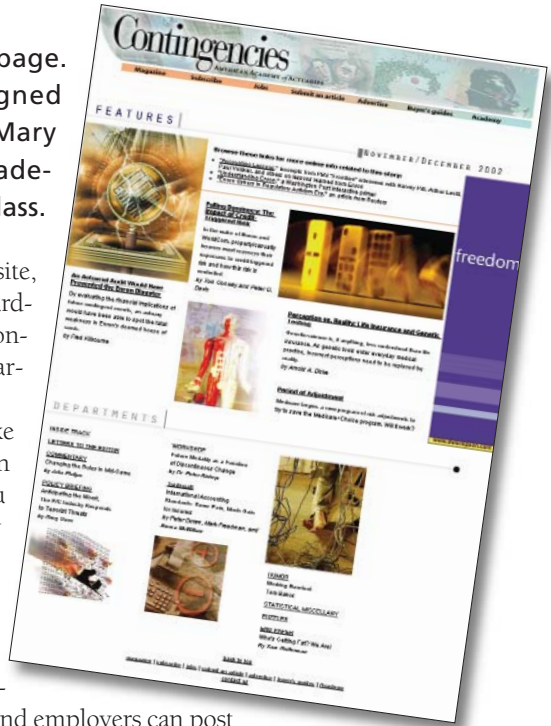

Mary (along with Becky Horst) has streamlined our magazine's site, made it even easier to get around and find things in. And Anne Richardson, our web editor, will be providing even more in-depth material online—right up top so you can find it easily—to make Contingencies articles that much more valuable to readers.

We've also added a few more bells and whistles that might make your lives a little easier. For example, under the "Subscribe" button in the top menu, you'll be able to change your own address so you won't have to miss a single issue of the magazine. It links you directly to whatever database you're in (SOA, CAS, CCA) and allows you to make the changes yourself. No more frustration with middlemen losing or misdirecting your requests. Don't you just love it?

And for actuaries looking to change jobs or locale, our Jobs page is now a searchable database. No more scrolling through tons of material you don't need in order to find the promising lead. Recruiters and employers can post their listings directly, and you can retrieve them by location, company, salary range, practice area, whatever. And best of all, it's still free.

Readers looking for articles in past issues will now be able to find them quickly and easily ("Magazine," "Past Issues" in the top menu)—at least the ones we're able to store electronically. But even if you need something from before January 2000 (that was back in the old 20th century, remember?) you can still find it in the "Print-only" search engine and order a copy. Also for free.

So please, pay contingencies.org a visit and find out what's new, what's different, and what's just as good as ever. ●
